Orland R. N. A. Elect Officers

The meeting of the Orland Park camp, Royal Neighbors of America, held Dec. 16th proved to be a very busy evening for everyone concerned. Besides being a regular business meeting the annual reports were read and election of officers were held and this was followed by a Christmas party with refreshments, games and exchange of gifts. The election resulted in the following officers being selected to govern the camp during the coming year:

Oracle, Edna Doctor; Past Oracle, Loretta Ludwig; Vice Oracle, Nellie Wheeler; Recorder, Mollie Reiser; Receiver, Maria Smith; Chancellor, Nora Felton; Marshall, Sylvia Stigers; Asst. Marshall, Emma Burkhardt; Inner Sentinel, Catherine Yates; Outer Sentinel, Christina Ruth; Manager, 3 year term, Frieda Burge.

The appointed officers will be announced by the newly elected Oracle at the next meeting.

The reports showed the camp to be in a sound, healthy condition, both financially and physically, and a general spirit of good fellowship was manifested throughout the evening. The election was most harmonious and the new officers have the pledged support of the entire membership.

In the social hour which followed the meeting the program was in charge of a committee consisting of Edna Doctor, chairman; Harriet Gee, Ruth Ludwig, and Emma Burkhardt, and a most enjoyable time was had. Christmas songs, Christmas decorations, Christmas refreshments, exchange of Christmas gifts, Christmas music, and Christmas spirit all combined to make the evening one long to be remembered.

History of Palos Park

By Ruby Stockdale

"Palos Township was organized in 1850 and was part of the 'York Precinct', which embraced the neighboring townships of Lemont, Orland, Worth and Blue Island. Palos was at first called Trenton, but the name was changed to Palos before the first regular township election," said Mrs. Alfred Pashley at a recent meeting of the Palos Park Young People's Forum.

The first permanent settlers in Palos came about 1832, the white settlers in 1833, but investigations show that Palos has a much earlier history.

The township can lay claim to the distinction of having afforded a passage for Marquette and Joliet on their return from exploring the Mississippi in 1673. The Saganaussee Swamp threaded by the stream now known as the "Canal", made a waterway to Stony Brook at Blue Island, which by short portage, connected with the Calumet river and thence to Lake Michigan.

Large groups of Indians had their villages in the environs of Palos hills hunted in the woods and carried on trade and warfare with the French long ago. Many Indians still remained in the locality when the white people came and they soon became close neighbors to the pioneers. During the horrors attending Black Hawk war, Waupunosa, a friendly Indian warned the pioneers of the danger. The people immediately took refuge in Fort Dearborn.

In 1856 two antique French axes and a copper powderhorn of antique design were found. The skeleton of a man whose gun barrel was rusted through, the wood entirely gone and two steel shoe soles such as were used by the French soldiers, were also found.

A skeleton was uncovered in a gravel pit near Worth, which, in the opinion of the anthropologists of the Field Columbian Museum, was that of a pre-historic Indian Chief from the Lake Superior region. He had been buried in a sitting position, his dog and weapons with him. Around his neck was hammered copper beads.

Mary Ritchey Bush is believed to be the first white child born in Palos in the year of 1837.

The religious element was strong among the pioneers of Palos. Before the Sacred Heart parish was formed the Catholic families attended services in the Sag church. The Protestant families held services in the old schoolhouse. Their first preachers were unordained and was usually one of the neighborhood.

The first school of the village was built in 1838. It was a "lean-to", built against a log cabin. The first log cabin school house was built in 1840 against a log cabin. The first log cabin schoolhouse was built in 1840.

The popular songs in Palos at that time were, "Take Your Gun and Go John", and "Stoney River."

And accompanying their speculations are wishes that the approaching days may be happier and more prosperous than those just past.

There is also the wish that each of the 365 days of the New Year may be brilliant as diamonds mounted in the finest setting of all, that most wonderful gift of Nature, Good Health.

It is not ordained that all of man's wishes shall be granted, but we take this opportunity to wish you Happiness and Health in 1938.

SYNOPSIS

Joyce Sewell, on the eve of her twentieth birthday, rebelled at her lot, dependent on her detested stepmother, Irma, and full of tragic memories of her mother's murder twelve years before and her father's death six months ago. Irma called in Helen Blackadder, an admirer, to help her persuade Joyce to marry rich, young Michael Kirkpatrick. Mike, sent up to Joyce by Irma and Blackadder, demands a showdown on his proposal and is rejected. Joyce realizes that La Barranca, a Mexican hacienda which her father had owned, legally belongs to her. Later, she receives a letter enclosing a warrant on the United States Treasury for $10,000 compensation for her mother's murder at La Barranca. She confers with Mr. Bradley, a banker and only remaining friend of her father's. She decides that she wants to make a secret journey to Mexico. Bradley arranges all details for her. She departs by plane undetected. Dirk Van Suttart, second secretary of the American embassy in Mexico City, gives Joyce a chilly reception and she loses her temper. She finds a Mexican woman lawyer, Margarida Fonseca, who takes her to General Onelia, right-hand man to the Mexican minister of war. Margarida reminds Onelia that the usurper of La Barranca is his dangerous enemy, General Dorado. The two make plans to send Joyce with a few picked men under Pancho Buenaventura to drive Dorado out. Adan Arnaldo, a young man who runs El Tenebroso, a night club, knows Dorado's present whereabouts, so they take Joyce there that night, where she notices Dirk. General Dorado arrives and in the course of sudden gunplay, the lights go out and Joyce is left alone. Adan Arnaldo whisks her out and takes her home. The following morning Joyce drives off to Toluca with Pancho. Back in Elsinboro, Joyce's disappearance has been discovered. Blackadder upbraids Irma, but succumbs to her helpless charm and plans to marry her. Blackadder gets the secretary of state to wire the embassy at Mexico City to locate Joyce. Dirk is delegated for the search. Dirk, getting no information from the lying Onelia, goes to El Tenebroso and interviews Arnaldo. Arnaldo bids Dirk follow him. Meanwhile Joyce and Pancho reach La Barranca. Pancho and Eusebio, one of his band, leave her and at dawn climb the wall. Suddenly shots ring out.

She sprang through the first zaguan and ran across the second court. She reached the second zaguan, entered the inner patio and plunged through odoriferous blooms to trip and all but fall over a dead body. Here also everything was silent—not the stillness of peace, the silence of terror and death. Every door on the lower floor was tightly sealed. She dashed up one branch of the double stairway which led to the balcony above. Fury still possessed her to the exclusion of all fear. Murder was being done on her account—murder before her very eyes.

Again shots pierced the silence, but they were rhythmic, punctuated. They came from the formal dining room. She dashed along the balcony and entered upon a scene so astonishing it brought her to an instantaneous halt. Her eyes were riveted on a figure as hideous as a gargyle which stood as if crucified against the wall beneath one of the sconces.

She recognized the visage of General Dorado, now twitching with terror as the rhythmic shots shattered one by one the lustres dangling over her head. Two other men were in the room, Eusebio and Pancho, both seated. The jumpers were gone, disclosing what had caused the bulges—bandoliers still half full of cartridges. Eusebio was rolling a cigarette, Pancho was doing the shooting and Dorado, wondering why he was being spared, had his glittering eyes fixed on his tormentor.

"Pancho!" cut in Joyce's voice between two shots. "You lied. You promised Gen—"

In one movement Pancho sprang up, snatched off his big sombrero and swung it backward at a venture, striking her across the mouth. For an instant Dorado stared at her with unbelieving yet consuming eyes, then his paralysis passed and he made a leap for the nearest door. With a double bloodcurdling yell Eusebio and Pancho were after him. Half knocked off balance by the rush of their passage Joyce was yet able to reach the balcony in time to watch the pursuit through the patio, across the visible section of the great court, through the zaguan at its far side and out by one of the gates into the limitless freedom of the prairie.

Joyce turned, went out and descended to the patio with a firm step. She must do something, summon aid. But first she wished to orient herself, revisit the spots she knew best. She glanced toward her one time playroom and saw that the huge key was on the outside of the lock. A moment later she had turned it and thrown open the door. She stood transfixed. It had become a stable—a pig-pen. Two horses turned their heads and stared at her as though startled and three fattening hogs, penned in one corner, grunted low as if only muzzling. She closed the door hurriedly and stepped back against a bush. The bush moved and she thought it was because she had touched it but the next instant her ankle was seized in an unbreakable grip. She looked down and saw a brown hand, a brown hairy arm.

She opened her mouth and screamed but no sound issued from her throat. She dragged back with all her might. Another hand came forward and then appeared the shoulders of a man. She tugged more furiously than ever. The other hand added its grip to the first. Now she could see his waist, the whole body, his shattered and bleeding thigh. He looked up and instantly she knew he was asking for no aid. The single thought in his eyes was as clear as if he had shouted it. He wished to pull her down, transfer his grip from her ankle to her throat and kill her before he died—all this for mi General Dorado. Then her voice came back—not her familiar grown-up voice but the voice of memory uttering a cry of the past.

"Luz! Luz! Luz!"

CHAPTER VII

Dirk followed Arnaldo around the crowded dancing floor, retrieved his overcoat and hat and a moment later the two men sprang into the same car that had rescued Joyce from the same spot four nights before. Adan barked a direction and the tone of his voice was sufficient to send the chauffeur tearing along through one street after another, skidding around corners and ignoring lights until he drew up with a squeal of brakes at an apartment house shrouded in darkness. On the third floor he stopped at a door, lighted a match to examine the name card, then rang the bell with one hand and knocked with the other.

"He's Dead," Said Several of the Crowd in Unison.

"Who is it?" asked a deep voice presently. "What do you want?"

"It's I, Margarida—Adan Arnaldo. Open the door. Something terrible has happened."

The latch clicked and the door swung back, revealing Margarida Fonseca.

"What do you want?" asked Margarida.

"Information."

"Take your hand off the gun. Do you think I'm an idiot?"

"Oh, I wouldn't shoot; I'd just tap over and around your brains—harder and harder."

"If I weren't amused I'd scream for help."

"You'd get it all right; the police are downstairs."

"What police?"

"Why do you suppose I'm running around with a gringo secretary of embassy?" countered Arnaldo.

"Don't you know a friend when you see one? Answer my questions and tell the truth or you'll go to jail in a nightgown."

"For what?"

"Abduction of a minor."

"What is it you wish to know?"

"Where is the girl?"

"She's gone to La Barranca."

"What for?"

"La Barranca is undoubtedly her property; I had to admit that much. Since I explained why the courts can do nothing she has gone there to plead with General Dorado to hand it back to her."

"I don't believe it!" said Arnaldo. "She told me she never wanted to see Pepe's horror of a face again."

Margarida smiled pityingly. "I'm the one who's telling the truth. The girl is at La Barranca. I swear it by every hair on the head of my dead mother."

"Where is La Barranca?" Dirk asked. "I mean how to you get there—by what road?"

"The road to Toluca," said Arnaldo out of a half daze. "The hacienda is southwest of Toluca. Once you've passed the city all you have to say is La Barranca to the first man you meet and he will point out the trail."

"How do you know so much about La Barranca, Adan?" asked Margarida curiously.

"For my sins I went to one of Pepe's shooting parties," said Arnaldo, still in a half daze.

Dirk rose. "I'm leaving for Toluca in half an hour," he stated. "What about it, Arnaldo? Any chance of your coming with me?"

"No," said Arnaldo, snapping out of his daze. He turned to Van Suttart. "Sit down," Dirk obeyed.

"What do you suppose I'm thinking about? Do you know Dorado? No. Well, I do. We're too late—too late by hours. To make the trip would be a mere sentimental gesture."

"Just the same I'm going," said Dirk.

"To take a fall out of a windmill," asserted Arnaldo impatiently. "Have you any idea what a Mexican hacienda is like?"

"No."

"It's a fortress. Don't be a fool. If you insist on making a journey to bring back the remains wait until you can take a horse and a troop of cavalry along with a battery of seventy-fives to help you. If your ambassador can't get them, come to me and I'll see what I can do."

"No," said Dirk. "You don't understand. He gave me a job and if I tried passing the buck back to him he'd be through with me for keeps and I wouldn't blame him. Do you mind dropping me at my place?"

Joyce stared down in horror at the wreck of a man at her feet. Reason told her since he was mortally wounded she must be stronger than he, yet she was not—all her strength had turned to water. From the waist up he was terribly alive. His right hand was still clamped on her ankle so tightly that circulation had almost ceased and with his left he had managed to seize her skirt. Rather than have it dragged off her she sank to one knee, straining her head back from the sight of his face.

"Luz!" she cried in a last despairing wail.

A bar clattered on the far side of the patio, a door opened and the figure of a woman stepped forth. She was ageless as are all peons once the bloom of youth has passed, but strong with the toughness of rawhide. Her leathery face would have been expressionless had it not been for the brilliance of cavernous black eyes. The instant they beheld Joyce their expression underwent a startling transformation. It did not occur to her she was staring at the babe she had nursed at her breast; what she thought she saw was that babe's mother to the very life.

She dashed to the rescue, screaming as she went: "Senor Maximiliano! Julio! Leonardo! Plutarco! Riquieta! Nataniel!"

As the last cry for help left her lips she sprang through the air to pounce like a cat, claws out, on Joyce's assailant. Clewless of the shattered hip which was uppermost she dug knowingly under his other thigh and presently tugged into view a sheath knife with a glittering blade a foot long. Gripping the handle with both hands she raised it on high. The man promptly gave up. He released his hold on Joyce, rolled over and with a sigh of relief exposed his breast to descending death. But he counted without Joyce. She seized Luz's wrists and wrenched them upward.

"No, Luz, no!"

At Luz's call doors had opened on every side and people were coming on the run. As the wondering group gathered Luz looked up, her face distorted in bewilderment. An instant later she dropped the knife, threw herself on her knees, bowed her head to the ground and began kissing Joyce's feet with a fervor interrupted only by elucidating wails.

"Joycita! Cita! Ciquita! My baby! At my breast—my own breast!" She looked up at the crowd through streaming eyes. "Our baby has come back to us!"

Joyce lifted her up and kissed her tear-wet cheeks. "Luz! Oh, Luz! But we can't talk now; we must get a doctor."

"What for?" asked Luz.

"This poor man—we must try to save him."

"He's dead," said several of the crowd in unison.

"Wait!" called a sonorous voice. "Wait for me."

Joyce looked around and memory, not quite sure of itself, stirred in her breast. An imposing figure was approaching along the gallery of the patio with carefully measured steps accompanied by the regular thump of a rubber-tipped staff.

"Who is he?" asked Joyce hurriedly.

"You have forgotten Don Jorge, Senor Maximiliano?" asked Luz. "Because he became blind," she explained, "they left him life."

"Of course," said Joyce, remembering. "Maxie, the superintendent. But blind!"

Luz stepped forward, caught Senor Maximiliano's free hand and kissed it with respect. She explained the baby of long ago had returned. He let fall his staff, reached out and laid hands on Joyce's shoulders.

"Maxie," she breathed, "I used to call you Maxie."

He wrapped his arms around her and held her close for a long moment of silence. "The babe is become a woman," he rumbled, "but she will always be a child to me. Welcome back to your home and to our hearts. Leonardo!"

"Senor," answered Leonardo, stepping forward.

"Summon the people; let them greet their mistress."

There was no need for Leonardo to issue a call since men, women, and children were already swarming into the precincts of the inner patio. They came from the outer court, the tienda and the scattered houses beyond the gates. Silently, their black eyes staring in wonder, they passed before Joyce, each pausing with bent knee to kiss her hand. A toddling infant closed the long procession, 500 strong. Joyce snatched up the baby and faced the throng.

"As this child is one of you," she called, "so am I. Boundaries divide peoples; they can't divide the human family. Love me and I will serve you; serve me with faith in your hearts and I will love you."

She turned to Senor Maximiliano and laid her hand on his arm. "Was that all right, Maxie?"

"Your father might have spoken the words," said Don Jorge, "and I know no greater praise. But I am confused. Let us go inside—you and Luz and I—and talk."

Don Jorge Maximiliano de la Sierra was a gentleman, a scion of a collateral branch of the family which had originally owned La Barranca.

Seated in the little room which had been her mother's boudoir, with Luz standing before them, Joyce told Don Jorge of her father's death and the dreary years culminating with the arrival of the warrant for $10,000. Then, interrupted by several sharp questions, she gave him the exact facts as to what had happened in the week since she had returned to Mexico.

"Let's say farewell to the past," said Don Jorge, "and face the present. What you have told me about Onelia troubles me profoundly. Why did he accede to your request? Why did his men kill Dorado and then abandon you?"

"They didn't," said Joyce quickly. "What!" cried Don Jorge, straightening in his chair. "Are you sure, my child?"

"Quite sure, Maxie. Didn't I tell you Onelia told Pancho Buenaventura that Dorado mustn't be killed at any price? They chased him away—I saw them with my own eyes—but they didn't kill him."

"Norway Pine" Misnomer; Forest Service Orders It Shall Be Known as "Red Pine"

The Federal Forest service has decreed that hereafter the Norway pine, so common to the Lake states, shall be known as, and called, the red pine. Instructions to this effect have been sent to all National forest custodians.

The name "Norway" has been in common usage with us although it is a misnomer. According to authorities the name is wholly out of place, for the tree is not a foreigner but a native of North America. It is related that the name Norway pine was given the tree by a Spanish captain who first found it here. Its close resemblance to pines he had seen in Norway caused him to suppose it identical with such as he had seen growing there, which undoubtedly were Scottish pines.

Simon B. Elliott, in his work on important timber trees of the United States, said: "Its technical name also is inappropriate. Pinus resinosa, which it is called, means resin pine, and why the red pine should be given that name when its wood contains less resin than any other hard timber pine is very strange."

The name red pine is appropriate for this tree and is quite generally recognized throughout its eastern range. The bark and wood are reddish, the winter buds red-brown, the staminate flowers scarlet or reddish purple and the scales of the pistillate flowers scarlet.

The red pine, next to the white pine, used to be the most important timber tree of the lake states. Today it is planted as extensively as white and jack over state and federal reservations. It has one advantage over white for reforestation purposes—it will take root and thrive in soils too sterile and light for white pine, and for this reason is found in extensive stands on the sandy plains of the North.

Name of Labrador

A venturesome Portuguese named Labrador discovered and gave his name to the eastern coast of Canada.

Change Wishes to Stitches

"GEE, if I could only afford that darling dress I saw the other day—I'd give my left arm—I!" We who are addicted to pretty clothes and subject to the usual feminine foibles (but not too well-blessed financially) often make a wish like this, don't we? Ah, but here's good news, Milady! Thanks to Modern Sew-Your-Own you can make all your wishes come true on the "pretty percentage" basis. You may have "that darling dress" at half the price (you won't have to give up your left arm either). Why not decide today to sew, sew, Sew-Your-Own?

Looking to Spring. The frock at the left has never been in anybody's window, but you can bet your bottom dollar it's going to be seen this Spring wherever style is of first importance. It interprets the mode in a young and graceful manner. And because it's a Sew-Your-Own original it's the last word in simplicity. Make it either with long or short sleeves in lame, sheer wool, satin, or velvet.

Pajamas for Madame. Pajamas that make you want to wake up and live; pajamas that help you sleep like a log—is that the kind you have in mind, Milady? You can depend upon today's model either in taffeta or velvet for leisure; cotton flannel, silk crepe or seersucker for sleepy time.

To Start the Day. A good way to start your day, Miss Keep-the-Home-Beautiful, is to wear a dress that makes you pretty as a picture. The model at the right will do just that. Furthermore, you will be thrilled to see how easy it goes together. It's fun to Sew-Your-Own, because then you can choose the color that does things for you, and you may enjoy variety of fabrics with the difference you save by sewing. Won't you join us today—one pattern will convince you that Credit Advertising Advertising created a demand for ready-made house dresses and that made mass production possible. Today you buy a ready-made house dress for less than your mother paid for the material from which to make a dress, and the production of these dresses provide jobs for many thousands of people.

Favorite Recipe of the Week Corn Tamale Pie. ONE-DISH meals for the main portion of the supper are a great help to the housewife who is doing the last minute preparation. This popular tamale pie can be fixed in the morning when you are doing work around the kitchen and then not heated until time to use.

Blend the whole kernel corn with the tamales, tomato sauce, and olives; season with salt and pepper and pour into a casserole. Sprinkle cheese over the top and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for about 40 minutes, or long enough to heat the pie thoroughly.

Hot biscuits, spiced peach pickles, and a green salad would taste good with this supper.

Fruit would make the best dessert. Just plain chilled canned pears, apricots, or plums would be a fine finish, or if you prefer, a soft custard may be served over the fruit.

Are Women Better Shoppers than Men?

GRANTING a woman's reputation for wise buying, let's trace the methods by which she has earned it. Where does she find out about the advantages and details of electrical refrigeration? What tells her how to keep the whole household clean—rugs, floors, bathroom tiling—and have energy left over for golf and parties? How does she learn about new and delicious entrees and desserts that surprise and delight her family? Where does she discover those subtleties of dress and make-up that a man appreciates but never understands?

Why, she reads the advertisements. She is a consistent, thoughtful reader of advertisements, because she has found that she can believe them—and profit thereby. Overlooking the advertisements would be depriving herself of data continuously useful in her job of Purchasing Agent to the Family.

For that matter, watch a wise man buy a car or a suit or an insurance policy. Not a bad shopper himself! He reads advertisements, too!

"Smith certainly is a foxy fellow. He's drawn up his will in such a way that the lawyers can't get more out of it than his own heirs."
"How's that?"
"Why, he left half his fortune to one of the best lawyers in the country, provided he saw to it that the other half went to Smith's children intact."

"Have you seen my dog this morning?"
"Seen him? I should think I have," said the butcher. "He came in here and stole a leg of lamb, bit my leg, and then upset a customer into some eggs."

"The greatest economic loss that America has ever sustained has been the loss of energy and profit in farming with an inadequate supply of phosphorus."

WHILE DR. HOPKINS MADE THIS STATEMENT IN 1908, every word of it is as true today as thirty years ago. With the same land and labor cost, the return and profit in farming would be much greater if our soils were balanced with phosphorus. The aim of every farmer should be to do this as quickly and sensibly as economic conditions permit.

The quickest and most return per dollar of cost is with—
FOUR LEAF POWDERED ROCK PHOSPHATE.
It is the only phosphate made particularly for direct soil application.

There are many who do not go to Sunday school. There are many who need to know the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. The only way they will ever get to Jesus is if some one brings them to Him. That is a thing that you can do. Do not give up if at first you do not win them. Keep on and on asking and inviting them, and at last you will win them. You can also keep on praying for them. Jesus said "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners." (Mark 2:17.)

Some of the Effects of Long Continued Drought

We discussed last week the unusual long continued drought of the summer and fall coupled with the development of a frost crust that will prevent penetration of the water of rain or snowfall into the ground until this frost crust melts. Hence, a dry sub soil condition, the extensive depth of which is without parallel in the memory of most of us. Our concern is, of course, not only well water supply and incidentally the appearance of methane gas, which is now being noted in the wells over a wide region but to a greater extent the effect this will have on the soil of 1938 and its cropping possibilities. The shallower wells will, of course, be the first to experience water deficiency and possibly the presence of methane gas. Methane (often known as marsh gas) is the highest in hydrogen of hydrocarbons. Its formula in terms of symbols wherein "C" stands for carbon and "H" for hydrogen is CH₄. In other words, it is made up of 4 atoms of hydrogen with one of carbon. It is largely the constituent gas of natural gas wells. It is given off in the mining of coal and in the coal mines is known as "white damp" in turn being carbon dioxide. Carbon dioxide or black damp is non-explosive but will suffocate animals including human beings. Methane or white damp if existing in large percentages not only suffocates but is also explosive if mixed with air in the neighboring proportion of two or five parts of methane in one hundred of air. Hence, we see that the danger of methane is its explosive character when intermixed in small proportions with air. This condition is present where methane could escape into living quarters.

When coal is first mined we have a technical term for the escape of gases that we call occlusion, and speak of the occluded gases of coal. It is a process involving changes following oxidation, in turn exposing organic material to the oxygen of air but which had long existed in a non-air or non-oxygen environment.

Let us see how this recent presence of methane is likely coupled up with the existence of drought. We know that air or oxygen penetrates down into soils for different depths according to conditions. The yellow and brown colors of clay or soil are due to different degrees of oxidation and hydration of the iron in soil, particularly in clay. Where these clays are mottled that means partial oxidation or hydration, being greater at some spots than others. As the process continues color gets deeper. When we get down deep enough in the soil below the penetration of air or oxidation, we have either the colorless white clays or the bluish color from unoxidized carbon. One factor most largely controlling penetration of air is the height of water table. The presence of water seals off the penetration of oxygen being air. When water table lowers, air penetration is deeper.

With the present drought, which is part of a condition dating back to 1930, and the unusual lowering of the water table we have in turn a depth of penetration of air bearing oxygen to greater than normal depths bringing about occlusion of gases, including methane from carbon bearing strata below the usual depth of oxygen penetration with increased carbon dioxide generation. Carbon dioxide is heavier than methane and will displace it and causing with continuous changes in barometric pressures soil nitration of gases; i.e. their movement in the soil collecting, of course, in cavities they can bleed into such as wells and cisterns or occasionally deep cellars. In our glacial region the unusual phenomena of noticeable quantities of methane and carbon dioxide follows.

The drought may not be the sole cause but likely can be considered as one of the principal contributing causes. As gases including air move readily than the percolation of water and the frost crust partially cuts off their escape through the surface, we can expect to find concentrations of gas at certain places and its absence at others but this does not lessen the fact of its production and occurrence and the unusualness of its presence as may also be said of the long continued drought. The frost crust also limits the free penetration of air which may have some limiting effect on the further production of these gases.

There are many other soil phenomena unusual in character that are caused by the long drought. With reference to cropping, one of the principal things is the long uprising soil sapillary moisture from great depths not only moving to the surface, previously downward leached nitrogen (largely in calcium nitrate form) but also calcium and phosphorus in forms that are usable by plants when they are concentrated in the surface, upon surface evaporation or absorption of the water by plants. These materials have aided our crop yields as water supply may have enabled such crops to grow and develop. These minerals have added to the quality of crop yields as phosphorus and calcium play such an important part in the plant growth and quality of crops we grow. But the point now uppermost in our minds is what may be the effect of this condition on the crops in 1938. What if in the spring we had unusual rains? We should give these matters some thought and will comment further on these possibilities in our next issue.

Plan to Celebrate 250th Anniversary Swedenborg's Birth

AMAZING as it seems that one mind could encompass so many varied realms of knowledge, nevertheless it is true that Emanuel Swedenborg, the 250th anniversary of whose birth will be observed January 29, 1938, made important contributions in many fields of science, theoretical and practical, in statesmanship, philosophy, and religion.

In 1716-1718 he published the first scientific periodical in Sweden, containing records of his mechanical inventions and mathematical discoveries, which included the first airplane design to have fixed wings and moving propeller, the first air-pump to employ mercury, and the description of a method for determining latitude and longitude at sea by observations of the moon among the stars. As assessor of the Swedish Board of Mines he devised many improvements in the mining industry of his day, and his works on iron and copper were authoritative throughout Europe. In the "Principia," a work on physics and cosmology, he arrived at the nebular hypothesis theory before Kant and Laplace. He advanced a molecular magnetic theory which anticipated certain modern views, and he was 150 years ahead of any other scientist in his works on the functions of the brain and spinal cord, and on the functions of the ductless glands.

Swedenborg served as an active member of the parliament of his country for more than fifty years, introducing fiscal reforms and much general legislation. He published works on algebra, higher mathematics, chemistry, engineering, physical science, metals and metallurgy, anatomy, physiology, psychology, and philosophy.

At the age of fifty-five Emanuel Swedenborg discontinued his scientific pursuits and began his work as a theologian, publishing the "Arcana Coelestia, Apocalypse Explained"; "Heaven and Hell"; "Four Doctrines"; "Divine Love and Wisdom"; "Divine Providence"; "Apocalypse Revealed"; "Conjugal Love"; "True Christian Religion"; and other miscellaneous theological works. Information regarding the life and achievements and the works referred to, will be sent without charge by application to the Swedenborg Foundation, New York City.

SNEAKIN' OUT TH' BACK WAY

BIRTH OF A SONG

WAIT TILL THE SUN SHINES. NELLIE

By Harry Von Tilzer and Andrew B. Sterling

From ASCAP Files

By Paul Carruth and Joseph R. Flie'er

HARRY VON TILZER, born in Detroit, began a career that has stretched into forty years as a songwriter, when he ran away from home at the age of fourteen to join a circus.

At sixteen, he had become a seasoned trouper in a stock company, not only playing juveniles, but singing and composing songs.

Lottie Gilson, comic opera star, encouraged him to go to New York—so he left—as good as a trainload of horses.

He left his load of dabbins with a dollar and sixty-five cents cash—but he was in New York.

The mecca of theatre talent in America in those days was Tony Pastor's, and Harry made for the famous music hall, where he began his career as a professional songwriter.

Von Tilzer always turned a ready ear to a snappy phrase, and from many overheard conversations came the titles and themes of his songs. He originated the phrase "Tin Pan Alley."

His first song hit, "My Old New Hampshire Home," sold more than two million copies, but all Harry got was fifteen dollars, five on delivery and the balance on approval.

Today he is not only a song writer, but a publisher and a highly regarded member of a American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

In the year 1877 she entered into the state of holy matrimony with Mr. Gottfried Koehler. This union was blessed with six children, three sons and three daughters. The three daughters preceded the mother into eternity some years ago.

She leaves to mourn her grief stricken husband, Gottfried Koehler, three sons, Dr. Gottfried Koehler, John and George Koehler, eight grand-children, one great-grand child and a host of other relatives and friends.

The funeral services were held Sunday Dec. 26 at 2 p. m. in the Christ Lutheran Church in Orland Park, with the Pastor A. Lach officiating. The church was filled to capacity with a large circle of relatives, neighbors and friends who had gathered in the shadow of the Christmas tree to pay their last tribute to the departed. We hereby wish to express our thanks to all those who so kindly extended their sympathy and to the telephone operators who so faithfully helped us put through our calls. We also thank all who sent floral offerings, Rev. Adolph Lach for his comforting words, Mr. Marvin Schmaedeke for his song. Dearest wife and grandmother how we miss her.

In our paths of life each day And we cannot comprehend it That she really went away.

But her old arm chair is vacant, And her face we do not see. Different is the entire household, Changed from what it used to be.

And each day how we will miss her, But sweet memories of her love Will forever give us comfort, Till we meet again above.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

EVERYBODY HUNTS
FOR HONEY

SUCH a funny time as there was in the Green Forest. All, or nearly all, the little people who wear fur went about with their heads up until you would have thought that their necks would have ached. Perhaps they did, but no one seemed to care. Only Jimmy Skunk and Prickly Porky went about their business just as usual. When they met their neighbors gazing up into tree tops they would laugh and say to themselves: "How foolish!"

What did it all mean? Why, just this: Everybody was hunting for the storehouse of Busy Bee. Yes, sir, that is just what everybody but Prickly Porky and Jimmy Skunk was doing. And the funny part is that no one wanted any one else to know what he was doing, yet everybody knew. You see, it was this way: Buster Bear, who had come to live in the Green Forest, is very, very fond of honey. Buster is so big and has such great, cruel looking claws, and such long, sharp teeth, and such a deep, fierce sounding growl, that nearly all the little people who lived in the Green Forest, or sometimes came up from the Green Meadows to visit there, were afraid, very much afraid of him. Jimmy Skunk wasn't. Jimmy isn't afraid of anybody.

Now it happens that Buster Bear had given Reddy Fox a terrible scare when Reddy was trying to catch Jumper the Hare, and Jumper had wished that he could do something in return for Buster. Buster had asked Jumper to keep his eyes open for the storehouse of Busy Bee, for he was very, very hungry for some honey, and Jumper had gladly promised that he would, though he didn't think there was much chance that he would find it, because, you know, Busy Bee usually chooses a hollow high up in a tree, and Jumper cannot climb trees. Sammy Jay had heard all this and straightaway Sammy had made up his mind that he would find that honey and tell Buster Bear and so make Buster Bear his friend. Then he remembered how terribly frightened Reddy Fox had been when he met Buster Bear. Sammy had made fun of Reddy and called him bad names, and so they were anything but friends. But now that he had had his fun at Reddy's expense, Sammy wanted to make up with Reddy. You know, they are both scamps, and usually it is best for scamps to be friends. Here was a chance to make up with Reddy. He would tell Reddy how he could make Buster Bear his friend by finding some honey for him, and Reddy would be so grateful that he would forget his quarrel with Sammy. It all worked out as Sammy had planned. Reddy was so much afraid of Buster Bear that he was willing to do almost anything to make him his friend, so when Sammy told him that he knew a way, Reddy wanted to know what it was. Sammy told him and Reddy started off right away with his head tipped back looking up in the tree tops for signs of Busy Bee. Sammy Jay chuckled, for Sammy meant to find that honey himself, and he knew that Reddy Fox, being unable to climb, would have very little chance to find it. But Reddy is smart. Yes, sir, he is smart. He knew just as well as Sammy did that he hadn't much chance for finding that store of honey himself, so he went to Happy Jack Squirrel and to Chatterer the Red Squirrel, who knew all the hollow trees, and promised them that if they would find the one where Busy Bee was storing her honey and would tell him, he would promise not to try to catch them any more. They wondered what Reddy could want with honey, but, of course, they agreed to hunt for the hollow tree with the honey. Then they discovered Jumper the Hare looking up in the tree tops, and he told them how he was hunting for honey for Buster Bear. Right away they guessed why Reddy wanted it, and made up their minds that they would tell Buster themselves if they found it, and so make him their friend. Of course, news like that travels, and pretty soon everybody who was afraid of Buster was hunting for honey.

It all worked out as Sammy had planned. TRY SOUPS FOR LUNCHEON MENU

Milk Chowder and Simple
Dessert Make Good Meal.

By EDITH M. BARBER

WHAT about soup for luncheon today? Perhaps you would like one of those good milk chowders, full of flavor and food value—the kind that is a full meal in itself. With plenty of toasted crackers or Melba toast, you will need only a simple dessert for a good meal.

The first thing to do is to see what vegetables you have on hand. Of course, you have onions and potatoes, perhaps a few stalks of celery and a carrot or two. There may be some leftover corn in the icebox, or you might open a new can. Next pare and dice the potatoes, celery and carrots, if you are going to use them; slice the onions and cook the prepared vegetables in a few tablespoons of butter for ten minutes or so. Don't let them brown, however. Then add just enough water to cover them; put a cover on your kettle and let them cook about twenty minutes, until tender. Now you are ready to add the milk, and corn, if you like, and to season the chowder to taste.

Any other leftover vegetables, such as peas, and tomatoes may go into your chowder also. You may, if you like, add a few canned shrimps for the sake of their color and flavor.

Milk Vegetable Chowder.

- 3 tablespoons butter
- 1 onion, sliced
- 2 stalks celery, diced
- 1 cup potatoes, diced
- ½ cup carrots, diced
- 1 cup water
- 4 cups milk
- Salt, pepper
- ½ cup canned corn or other cooked vegetable.

Melt the butter and cook the onion, celery, potatoes, carrots in butter three or four minutes. Add the water and cook, covered fifteen to twenty minutes until vegetables are tender; add milk seasoning and cooked vegetables; reheat and serve with toasted crackers or Melba toast.

Quick Onion Soup.

- 6 medium-sized onions
- 3 tablespoons butter
- 1 quart soup stock or
- 5 bouillon cubes and
- 1 quart water
- 3 slices bread
- ½ cup grated or strained cheese

Slice onions and brown in butter. Add soup stock and bring to a boil. Put in casserole. Slice bread one-half inch thick, cut in halves and toast lightly. Float on top of soup and sprinkle with grated cheese. Bake in hot oven (500 degrees Fahrenheit) ten minutes or until cheese melts.

Cream Soups.

- 3 tablespoons butter
- 1 tablespoon minced onion
- 3 tablespoons flour
- 1 teaspoon salt
- Pepper
- 3 cups milk
- 1½ cups ground or strained cooked vegetables.

Melt butter, add onion and cook one minute. Stir in flour and seasoning and add milk gradually. Stir over fire until smooth. Add vegetables (mixed vegetables may be used). Reheat and add more seasoning, if necessary.

A dash of nutmeg with pea soup, of cloves and sugar with tomato, of celery salt with potato, of paprika with corn will improve the flavor. If tomatoes are used add ¼ teaspoon of soda before cooking with the cream sauce.

THE NEW YEAR'S RECONCILIATION

by
BLANCHE

ADDIE ROOT and Mattie Campbell had always been friends until Miss Mattie claimed Miss Addie's dog chased her cat and tore up her flowers. The fence was built and the boundary line of the two places ran so close to Miss Addie's gooseberry bush that some of the branches of the bush hung over the fence. The bush belonged to Miss Addie but the fruit on Miss Mattie's side of the fence Miss Mattie claimed. So Miss Addie picked the fruit on her side of the fence and Miss Mattie that on hers.

The Jar Had Held Candied Ginger in Miss Addie's Childhood.

Last summer, being sure that Miss Mattie was away from home, Miss Addie went in through the rear gate and picked the fruit on Miss Mattie's side of the fence. The jam in the jar before her, which she had taken down from the shelf for her supper that cold New Year's eve was from that fruit. The jar had held candied ginger in Miss Addie's childhood and she recalled how she and little Mattie had eaten the ginger from it. She recalled that she and Mattie had picked gooseberries from a bush which grew near the place where the bush which had caused so much trouble now grew. She recalled the many happy times she and Miss Mattie had spent together—the times when Miss Mattie had been a real friend in need—had helped to ease some hurt or lighten some sorrow. What a pity it seemed that such friendship should ever be broken. Miss Addie's dog had been given away long ago, and Miss Mattie's cat had wandered away from home and never returned. With the two original causes of the trouble gone, wasn't it too bad for one-time friends to remain enemies? Wouldn't it be better to turn over a new leaf this New Year's day and renew their friendship?

It seemed so to Miss Addie and she resolved not to waste another minute, but do it right away! So with a jar of jam in her hand and love in her heart she went to wish Miss Mattie a happy New Year.

Watch Night

On New Year's eve midnight masses and watchnight services are held everywhere, while those less inclined to religious observances make the closing minutes of the year an occasion for jollity.

Welcome, New Year

WELCOME to you, New Year, enter newborn king—
Can you tell us something of the tidings that you bring?
Do you carry happiness?
Enough to last the year?
Do you sing a song of joy
To cast out doubt and fear?
Perhaps a balm for heartaches
You bring along with you;
Perhaps a key to friendships
To buoy us all year through.
We bid you welcome, New Year—our dreams we trust with you,
Forgetting ill of all the past, we start the book anew.

January Was for Janus, God of New Adventures

THE month of January bears its name because Janus was the god of the opening year. He presided over the undertaking of any new adventure, and was a god known only to the Romans. The Romans adopted January as the first of the year from the reign of their second king, Numa Pompilius, who ruled until 672 B. C.

Not until the Eighteenth century was January universally adopted as the beginning of the year. England took the step in 1752, and Sweden in 1753, but other European countries adopted this New Year's day at an earlier date; France in 1564, Holland, Protestant Germany and Russia in 1700.

New Year's at White House
Since the White House was not completed during our first President's lifetime, the John Adames were the first presidential family to occupy it. The first drawing room or New Year's reception was held in the "President's palace," as it was then referred to, on New Year's day, 1801.

THE GOSPEL OF MARK: A PREVIEW

LESSON TEXT—Mark 10:35-45.
GOLDEN TEXT—And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be the servant of all.—Mark 10:44.
PRIMARY TOPIC—What Two Brothers Asked Jesus.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Who Are the Great?
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Look at the Gospel of Mark.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Mark's Gospel: Author, Origin, Theme.

Beginning a New Year is always a thrilling experience. The thought of an unwritten record is a pleasant one and at the same time most solemnizing. We must take heed, you and I, what we write upon that page which lies before us with the inviting caption—"1938."

Next to having New Year's day fall on Sunday, it is most appropriate that the Lord's day should come between the holiday of yesterday spent with our family and friends, and the work-day on the morrow, when we begin the year's labors. Today we tarry in God's house to pray and counsel together in the light of his Holy Word regarding the new year of grace and opportunity.

We begin today a six-month study of the Gospel of Mark, which presents Christ as the Servant of God. It is the Gospel of the mighty acts of divine power, rather than of words. It is characterized by energy and spontaneity. It moves rapidly. The characteristic words are "straightway," "immediately," and "forthwith," which are used more than forty times.

Before considering our lesson for today, we would undoubtedly like to "meet the author." John Mark was the son of the Mary in Jerusalem in whose home was "the upper room" where so many important events took place. He was a cousin of Barnabas and went with him and Paul on the first missionary journey. For some reason he lost heart and went home, much to Paul's distress. Happily we find that the young man redeemed himself in Paul's estimation and was later well spoken of by him (Col. 4:10, Phile. 24, and I Tim. 4:11).

The lesson text chosen for our "preview" of the Gospel is one which shows the weakness of human ambitions as contrasted with the true spirit of humble service which characterized Christ.

I. Selfish Ambition Rebuked (vv. 35-41).

Ambition is not in itself wrong, but when it becomes so extreme that it projects self forward at the expense of others it becomes selfish and destructive. The fact that these men were evidently earnest and were, indeed, seeking a place with the Lord in his glory does not change the situation. They were selfish even in dealing with holy things.

James and John had asked for a great honor in the kingdom, but had not sought to share in the suffering that preceded it.

Their own ignorance of what was involved, their own weakness, their observation of God's hand in the carrying out of his own plans, should have deterred them. There is such a thing as holy boldness, but there is also such a thing as unholy temerity.

II. Sacrificial Service Defined (vv. 42-45).

Christianity is not organized after the manner of secular government (v. 42). Much of the mischief that has come to pass in the church is the result of "running the church" as an organization, when it should be allowed to develop as a living organism.

Anyone who observes with even a little care knows that the church of Jesus Christ is hindered most seriously by the presence of pride and selfish ambition. Some people will not work unless they can rule. Their money is withheld unless it buys for them a dominating interest. The pastor is persona non grata unless he recognizes the desires of the "right" people. None of these things are done as obviously as our words would suggest. There is much careful "fixing" and "wire-pulling" behind the scenes. But it amounts to exactly the same thing, and it is all entirely foreign to the spirit of Christ.

Are there then no Christians who humbly serve the Lord? Yes, praise his name, there are many, and wherever they are found they are the salt of the earth. God uses and blesses them to his own glory. They may not be (and often are not) in "positions of leadership," but they are actually the leaders of the church in its true work on the earth.

Man

Man is by nature weak; he is born in and to a state of dependence; he therefore naturally seeks and looks about for help.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Make Luncheon Sets of Striped Material.

THE napkins and mats are fringed and then whipped to keep them from raveling and to strengthen the edge. This is a very quick and easy finish to use for linens of the coarser weaves and is in harmony with peasant dishes and provincial furniture.

In cutting the material for the mats and napkins it is best to pull a thread to guide you so that the edges will be perfectly straight and fringe easily. Cut right along the little opening made in the material by drawing the thread as shown at A. Plan the size of the mats and napkins so that the material will cut to good advantage and the stripes will arrange themselves in a pleasing way through the center of each piece. Napkins for this purpose may be as small as nine inches square. Mats are usually about eleven by eighteen inches.

Pull out the threads to make the fringe at the edge as I have shown here at B. From a half to three-quarters of an inch is a good depth for the fringe. Save the threads you pull out and use them for whipping the edge as I have shown here at C.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; restoring and upholstering chairs, couches; making curtains for every type of room and purpose. Making lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents, to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Illinois.

Bank Fire Only With Fresh Coal—Never Smother It With Ashes or Cinders.

THERE is no mystery about how to bank a fire for the night. I'd like to give you the easiest, simplest method I know of, so that you will have no trouble getting abundant heat in the morning.

To make room for fresh coal, shake the grates gently until you see the first red glow in the ashpit! Then pull the live coals toward the front, using a shovel or a hoe, so that the bed slopes downward from the edge of the fire-door to the back. Shovel fresh coal into the hollow, being careful to leave a spot of live coals exposed in front to act as a "hot spot" in igniting the gases given off by the fresh coal, preventing puffs and explosions.

Allow sufficient time for these gases to be exhausted before banking the fire. When this is done, close the ashpit damper, open the check damper, leaving the turn damper as nearly closed as possible. Never leave the fire-door open after the fire is banked for the night.
